THE GAP

Islamic giving has a trust problem

The challenge is not only payments. It is governance visibility, audit readiness, and donor confidence across very different kinds of institutions.

For donors

- Hard to verify whether a charity is well managed, well governed, and accountable
- Little consistency in how impact, financial discipline, and project evidence are shown
- Weak visibility into whether reporting improves or deteriorates over time

For organizations

- Many credible organizations lack structured tools to prove governance and compliance consistently
- Audit, finance, and reporting requirements are often fragmented and resource-heavy
- Lower capability can look like lower trust — even when the mission itself is strong

Malaysia makes this harder

- NGOs, mosques/surau, waqf bodies, tahfiz institutions, and state-linked entities operate under different oversight models
- Funding can involve zakat, waqf, sadaqah, or mixed funds — each with different controls
- One rigid checklist cannot fairly assess every Islamic charity structure

Result: donors struggle to trust, and smaller organizations struggle to qualify.

OUR MODEL

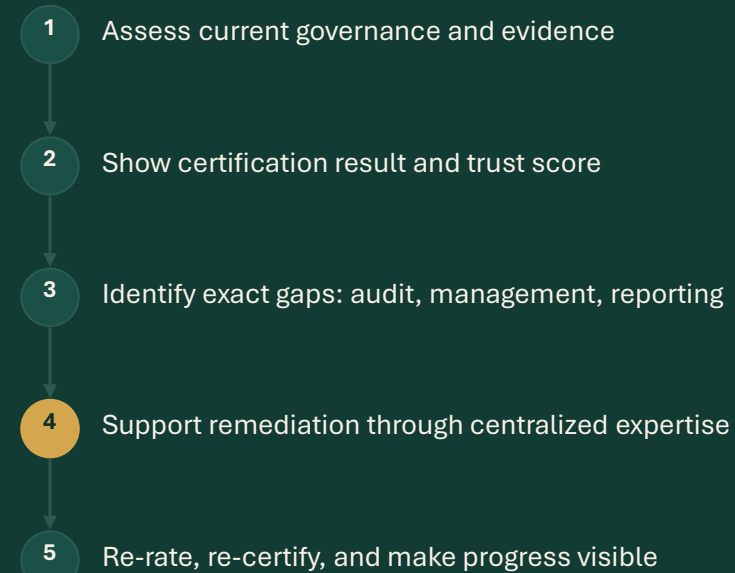

Not just a rating platform — a rating and uplift platform

Where governance, management, audit, or reporting standards are weak, the score reflects it transparently. But the organization also gets a pathway to improve.

How the model works

- CTCF evaluates governance, financial transparency, project traceability, impact discipline, and Shariah governance
- Amanah Index™ shows ongoing trust through verified events and immutable history
- Poor controls do not get hidden; they reduce rating and certification outcomes
- Centralized expert support then helps close those gaps continuously, so organizations can improve audit readiness and trust standing

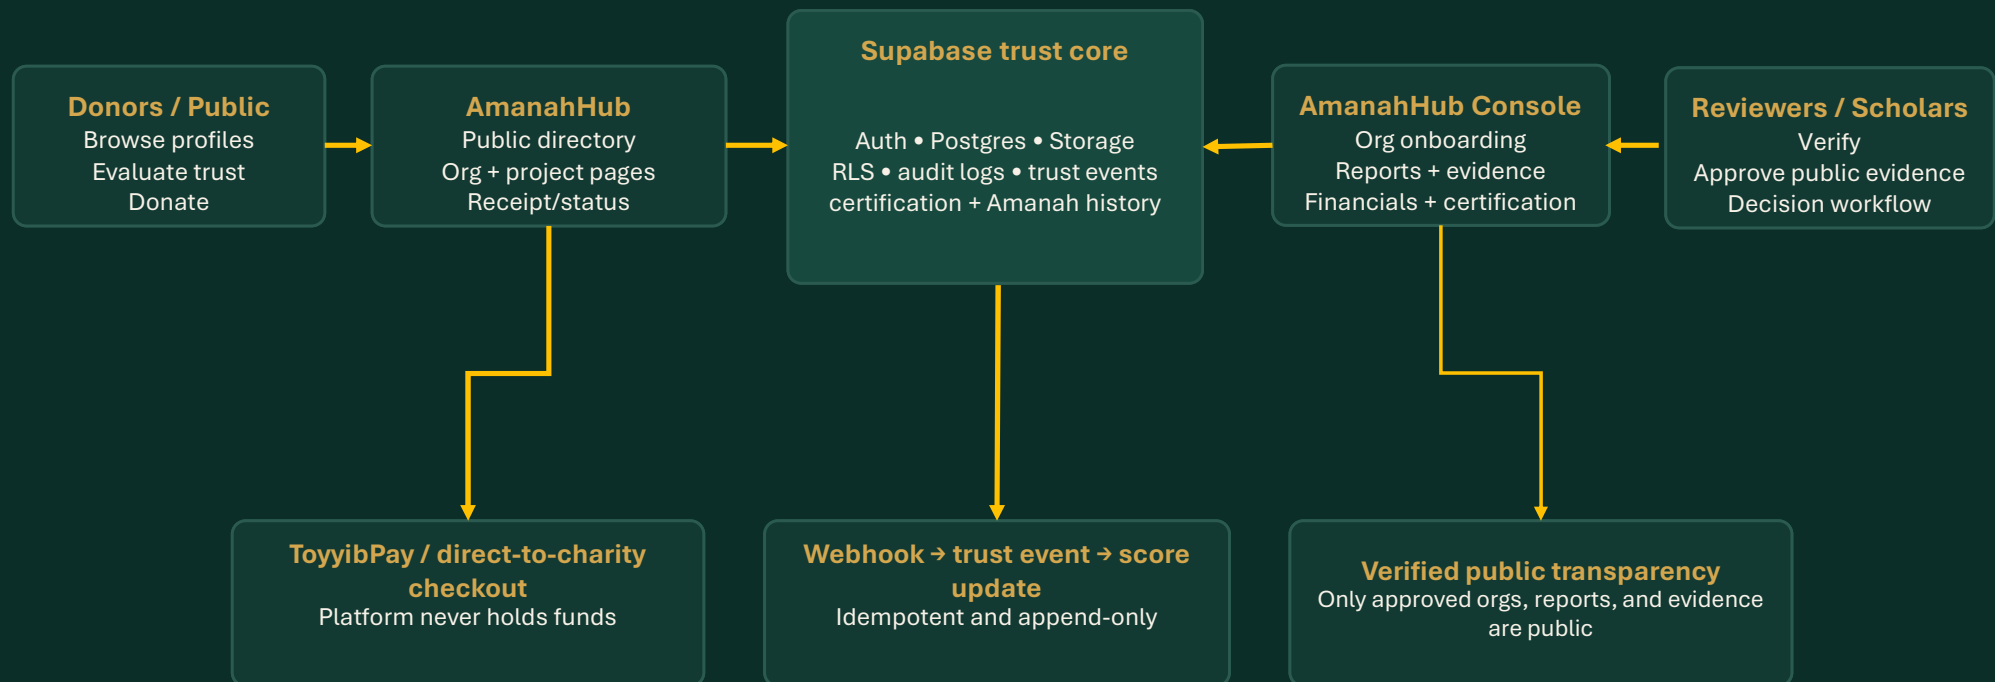

Continuous improvement loop

PLATFORM FLOW

How the platform works

A Supabase-first, two-app architecture with direct-to-charity payment flow, reviewer controls, and trust-history updates.

WHY WE WIN

Built for the real governance complexity of Malaysia

The platform adapts to different Islamic charity structures — and the support model helps weaker organizations become stronger over time.

NGO / foundation

Mosque / surau

Waqf body

Tahfiz / school

State-linked body

Mixed oversight

Adaptive scoring and certification

- Requirements differ by organization type, oversight authority, and fund type
- Audit expectations are not identical for all institutions
- This makes the trust model fairer and more credible

Centralized compliance and audit support

- A lower rating is not the end state — it is a diagnostic starting point
- The platform can be paired with centralized expertise to help fill gaps in management, documentation, audit preparation, and ongoing reporting
- As the organization improves, its index and certification can improve visibly over time
- This creates a scalable “trust infrastructure + capability uplift” model

Phase 1 launch path

The immediate goal is a credible pilot: real organizations, real reporting, visible trust history, and a practical path to scale.

Pilot targets

- 10–20 charities onboarded
- 3–5 active pilot partners
- Verified reports, public-safe evidence, and visible score history
- Direct-to-charity donation confirmation with reliable webhook flow

What partners gain

- A structured trust and transparency framework
- A better donor story grounded in evidence and history
- A practical route to improve governance, audit readiness, and reporting discipline
- A Malaysia-first model that can scale category by category

What we are asking for

- Pilot charity partners
- Reviewer / scholar ecosystem support
- Strategic implementation and funding partners
- A shared mission to make Islamic giving safer, clearer, and more trusted

Amanah Governance Platform turns transparency into trust — and trust into stronger institutions.
